See attached.

3. Comment on the usefulness of the mission statement in guiding your work. What should be included or deleted?

The mission statement was revised in 2001 and is very useful in guiding the committee. The committee would like to consider a slight revision to the mission statement reflecting the name change of the department and perhaps changing the title of the committee to meet current terminology. No formal action was taken in this regard.

4. Briefly summarize the major work accomplished by your committee this Academic year.

During the 2010-11 year, the FSPC approved ten new program proposals, reviewed eighteen existing programs, denied two program proposals, and terminated one program. Most of the reviewed programs are on a three to four year review cycle. Programs are reviewed every three to five years unless the committee finds reason to review them more frequently. The results of this year's reviews are to be found in the following list. The schedule for future reviews and detailed summaries of this year's reviews are available from Hiroe Sorter, the FSPC Coordinator.

The following programs were reviewed in 2010-11 and judged satisfactory by the FSPC. They will be reviewed again on the following schedules:

5. Briefly summarize the major work you believe this committee should undertake next year.

Next year the committee will review about 16-18 programs. Also, the committee will consider new program proposals submitted during the academic year, and programs where issues may arise during the year.

6. Briefly summarize the workload of this committee in hours per week.

The committee met ten times during this academic year. Meetings average about 1.5 hour. On average, each committee member prepares review material for the committee for two programs. This preparation involves reviewing program materials, student and faculty evaluations and preparing a summary. Program summaries can take three to five hours to prepare, in general. Therefore, committee members will spend about 25 hours during the academic year attending meetings and working on committee assignments.

7. Explain whether you think the current mission and structure of this committee is best serving the short and long-term goals of the university faculty.

Yes, this committee provides a useful and necessary review of study abroad programs by an impartial cross-departmental body. The committee can complete its mission effectively because of the diligent and insightful work of committee members, and the organization and support provided by the OIA staff. As a bonus, committee members become better informed of the student opportunities for study abroad, and faculty opportunities for teaching abroad.

8. Explain what work of the committee you believe to be central and therefore should continue to be carried out by the committee.

All work currently carried out by the committee is useful, central to the mission of the committee and should be continued.

9. Explain what work might be best done elsewhere. Where do you suggest?

The committee works efficiently. No changes are suggested.

10. Is there one or more committees you believe this committee could usefully merge with in the conduct of business?

No, the committee is appropriately focused and with a reasonable workload.
