

Jaewoo Kim, Lundquist College of Business

I currently serve as an Assistant Professor of Accounting in the Lundquist College of Business. Before joining the University of Oregon in 2019, I spent six years at the University of Rochester. Throughout my tenure at both institutions, I have been actively engaged in graduate education.

Despite my short tenure at the University of Oregon, I have already taken an active role in educating graduate students. First, I served as a second-year paper adviser for a doctoral student. The student successfully presented the paper that she coauthored with me on December 2020 and is on her way to starting her dissertation. I've also been working on several papers with a fifth-year doctoral student who just accepted a tenure-track position at a major state university in Texas. One paper is already under review at one of top accounting journals. I also taught a directed reading course with doctoral students during the Spring 2020 term. This class led to several working papers with doctoral students.

My dedication to graduate education goes back to my tenure at the University of Rochester, where I played various roles (either as a member or a reader) on both the second-year student paper committee and the dissertation committee. At the University of Rochester, I also taught several graduate-level classes including MBA (Corporate Financial Reporting) and Master of Accounting programs (Intermediate Financial Reporting and Positive Accounting Theory).

In sum, my experience in the area of graduate education in both the University of Rochester and the University of Oregon will allow me to provide advice to the Dean of the Graduate School on matters pertaining to graduate study at the University of Oregon. I view this as a great opportunity to provide valuable service to the University of Oregon.
