

Mohsen Manesh, School of Law

This academic year marks my tenth at the University of Oregon School of Law, where I am currently an associate professor. In 2015, I transitioned from the main campus in Eugene to the UO Portland, campus, where I teach all of my classes and also serve as the faculty director of the School of Law's Portland Program. The program enables UO law students to complete their final year of study in Portland, taking advantage of the many real world experiences and professional networking opportunities that Oregon's largest city uniquely offers. As faculty director of the School of Law's Portland Program, I work in close collaboration with my UO Portland colleagues, my law school colleagues in Eugene, as well as many Portland-based external partners. My hope is that my experiences, both in Eugene and Portland, will offer a unique perspective to the University Senate.

Thank you for your consideration.